

Jurisprudence

An International Journal of Legal and Political Thought

Annual Lecture

A J Julius

Mutual Recognition

Friendship, conversation, art, justice, law, interpersonal morality, and ordinary practical cooperation offer examples of a common syndrome, mutual recognition. Each of two mutually recognizing persons knows herself to be capable of and responsible for acting toward the other in ways that presuppose the other's knowing herself to be capable of and responsible for doing the same. After bringing out some libertarian, egalitarian, and solidaristic aspects of a cosmopolitan political ideal of mutual recognition, the lecture will argue that it depends for its achievement on interpersonal and international struggle.

A J Julius is an Associate Professor in Moral and Political Philosophy at the UCLA Department of Philosophy. He is the author of Reconstruction (Princeton University Press, 2016).

Thursday, 28 January 2016, 6pm
London School of Economics, Room PAR.2.03

A reception will follow the lecture

LSE campus map available here
Information on travelling to the LSE available here

